Q: Detecting Long Running and HeavyIO tasks with Hadoop Streaming I have around 1 million records to analyze using Hadoop Streaming. In my case the records contain integer values that I need to process via map and then reduce using a custom reduce function. The problem with this scenario is that each time I attempt to write to the output file, my code hangs and never completes, causing me to kill the job. How can I detect the execution of my job and ensure that my code runs properly? A: Add `-Dmapreduce.tasktracker.map.tasks.maximum=` `-Dmapreduce.task.timeout=` to your `hadoop-conf.sh`. This will ensure that the job executes no more than `number-of-map-tasks-to-run` task in specified time limit. The java process will be killed by hadoop in case of timeout. You should also set a value for `-Dmapreduce.tasktracker.map.slowstart.java.opts` in your job configuration. This will ensure that the process starts only after the previous task is complete. Refer :
