Barbaric, Vile, and Gloomy In the Kingdom of Khrona where civilization was in decline, the young warlock Lord Andron was summoned to protect the kingdom from the strange and terrifying Hiscore. In the process, he lost part of his humanity. The Hiscore came from beneath the Earth, and began to grow in power. Powerful magics were being used for unknown purposes, and the magic-wielding population of Khrona was rapidly losing its morality.

People lost their families, they lost their homes, they became cannibals, they became rapists, they became murderers, and all of them died mysteriously. The Hiscore began to travel in giant, man-shaped hordes with gigantic skulls sticking out of their backs. Weakened and powerless, the kingdom could not stand against them. The gods turned their backs on the kingdom, and its people became despair and rebellion and disgrace, and all of them died of shame and fear and the plague. The most powerful humans and the most powerful monsters converged on Khrona to join hands. They could not stop Hiscore or they would die. Andron had to save his kingdom. So, he began to banish Hiscore and quest for the Defilements. He had to kill or to be killed, he had to win or to lose, he had to save or to doom the entire kingdom. However, the Defilements were scattered, and the minions of the Hiscore had not given up. Find the three

UK ruling on bacon, haggis and deep fried Mars bars

According to the UK's Advertising Standards Authority (ASA) consumers are being misled when products on the shelves claim they are 'Made in the UK.' With a string of snacks and drinks being dished out and marketed to UK consumers, the ASA believe consumers should be ensured there is a level of assurance a product is responsibly produced, with not only the UK but UK local suppliers supplying the product. In a ruling on Monday, March 28, the ASA, the UK's advertising and consumer protection authority, told Walkers Bacon and Mars foods, among others, that claims that a product, 'comes from the UK' or 'Made in the UK'
