To evaluate urinary incontinence as a consequence of a pilon fracture, as a measure of injury severity and as a prognostic factor. Prospective cohort study. Female pelvic floor rehabilitation unit. Twenty-three female patients with a pilon fracture were assessed for incontinence. Incontinence was divided into five levels (0: no incontinence to 4: incontinence to pass urine during coughing). The patients' perineal injury, urethral injury, limb injury and pilon fracture level were recorded. Twenty-one women (91%) reported initial continence and nineteen women (83%) returned to continence after pelvic floor rehabilitation. Four women (17
