A: You could try those: `#!/bin/bash while read file do url= wget -O $file $url done` Epinephrine, esmolol, and dexmedetomidine for stroke volume-directed cardiac resynchronization therapy. In heart failure, response to cardiac resynchronization therapy (CRT) may be limited by under- or overtreatment, in particular as a result of autonomic nervous system activation, or in the setting of arrhythmia induced hemodynamic disturbance. Patients with marked hemodynamic instability or signs of acute heart failure at implantation of CRT may benefit from a dobutamine infusion prior to implantation of CRT in order to optimize CRT response and to evaluate the potential for improvement of left ventricular function by CRT. Epinephrine, esmolol, and dexmedetomidine have been used for controlled circulatory stabilization in such settings. In this review, evidence for the three agents used for circulatory stabilization in conjunction with CRT and what clinical impact such an approach may have are analyzed. Epinephrine has been compared to a placebo in a randomized study of patients undergoing implantation of a CRT device. Esmolol and dexmedetomidine have not been studied directly in the context of CRT. Results of randomized studies have shown that low-dose epinephrine infusion resulted in a greater increase in stroke volume in patients with heart failure at the time of CRT implantation than placebo and did not affect the left ventricular ejection fraction. Data from observational studies indicate that esmolol or dexmedetomidine use may also be beneficial as part of circulatory stabilization in conjunction with CRT implantation. A randomized study has shown that while esmolol did not affect left ventricular function, dexmedetomidine may result in a small improvement in left ventricular function. Based on the available evidence, in the majority of patients with heart failure and signs of autonomic nervous system activation during evaluation for CRT, the combination of a dobutamine infusion with a β -blocker is recommended in order to optimize CRT response. In patients with a low acute response to CRT, a vasopressor agent (epinephrine or ephedrine) can be used in conjunction with a β -blocker. One year ago I had a 4 e79caf774b
