Diabetes is a common disorder affecting many people. There are two main forms of diabetes: Type I (“juvenile-onset”) and Type II (“adult-onset”). Type I diabetes develops when the body's immune system destroys the cells of the pancreas that produce insulin (the hormone that allows the body to use the sugar found in blood (glucose) to supply the body's cells with energy). Because Type I diabetes cannot be controlled or reversed, it usually results in life-long insulin injections, either directly into the veins or through a pump. Type II diabetes usually develops after 40 years old. It is the most common type of diabetes and accounts for 90% of all cases of diabetes in the United States. In Type II diabetes, the body's insulin response is deficient and/or insulin resistance occurs. Consequently, the body's tissues become resistant to insulin, the hormone responsible for the uptake of glucose

Q: Disable DHCP from within the guest VM on ESXi 5.5 I have a VM in ESXi 5.5. I want to have it be completely isolated from everything else on the network; just be able to use the built-in network connections, nothing else. The first part of this is easy - going into the network configuration of the VM, I set Interface Control Group Interface IDs to the built-in interfaces. Thus the other VMs will not have the same configurations as the VM I'm working on. This part works. Now the complication - I want to make sure that the VM can't get a DHCP address, so it can't be assigned static IPs. This should be as simple as checking the DHCP box in the hosts configuration, but it isn't - when I do this, the whole network comes up! The network interface IDs appear to not matter for DHCP, I even tried making them be the same as the built-in interfaces, to no avail. I also haven't tried doing the same configuration on the ESXi host - I don't want to mess with anything on the ESXi host because I don't want the host to be reachable from the outside, just the guest machine. Any help would be greatly appreciated!

A: I tried to do this years ago when we had ESX 4.1 for hypervisors...It worked great. All you need is to set the DHCP client to NOT automatically update
