.While working on coding the door monitoring code I ran across a few notes in the code that I didn't fully understand: ModuleStart The intent of this function was for the developer to create a structure similar to the Windows Registry. This was only applicable to the year 2001 when Windows XP came out and had a registry of users, programs, and devices: public static Registry Register(string path, string name, [int]string value) In the ColdFusion user manual for the tag I found out that the structure holds all the information necessary to identify a window for every portal. From this I thought the registry would hold the information about my door's hardware and software including the OEM and factory OEM configuration. The first time I look at the registry it only had one entry, and the value contained the folder path from the tag: [HKEY_CLASSES_ROOT\{B0 B1A3C3-9CE0-47E9-BF34-F0A5E538B0B8}] After changing the name of the variable back to the OEM configuration this would take me a long time to fix: I thought maybe this was user specific so I looked up the registry key for the other administrator's account that had to be changed: Also found the OEM configuration and then the key for the application object: [HKEY_CURRENT_USER\Software\RegisteredA pplications] Windows doesn't allow two application servers to be installed simultaneously with the same path so we had to restart the application or use the manual method for changing it. Hopefully this has helped you and your team find this information with the help of this blog.Category Archives: Travel Tips From time to time we receive questions and comments about our tours, such as where our tours depart from, how long the tours take, and how many people are in the group. The first is answered within the information page of the tour listing, the second is answered when we email the tour information to you, and the third we cannot answer for you. We understand that, because of the size of our family, traveling with a teenage child, we may not have the same number of people in our family as other families. Since we are able to work with small tours, if you find it hard to decide on how many people you want to travel with, we would be happy to work with you
