The decreased survival of aged rat hepatocytes was correlated with increase in lipid peroxidation. Because increased levels of lipid peroxidation have been reported in the aged liver, the surviving hepatocytes of aged and young rats were examined for their capacity to oxidize fatty acid substrates. Aged male rats (22 months old) were fed on standard laboratory diets with and without the addition of xanthine oxidase (XO) to the chow. Livers from the young and aged rats fed on chow diets that had 0.21, 0.24, 0.27, 0.30, and 0.33 u XO/g diet exhibited fatty acid oxidation rates that were 68, 65, 60, 60, and 52% of the rates in young rats fed on chow diets. These liver preparations oxidized fatty acid substrates at rates that were 2.4- to 4.2-fold higher than those of the aged rats fed on the same diets with and without XO. Thus, the oxidation of fatty acids by the aged liver is reduced at rates that are approximately the same as those of the young liver unless conditions are present that accelerate peroxide formation. Furthermore, the decreased survival of aged cells may be due in part to the decreased capacity of aged hepatocytes to produce peroxide.Application of the localized phase-mismatch approach in the amplification of all-solid-state resonators with photonic crystal structures. This letter reports a new approach to improve the quality factors of all-solid-state optical resonators based on photonic crystals (PCs). The approach is based on the localized phase mismatch between the PC structure and the surrounding medium. A rigorous analysis of this phase-mismatch effect is carried out using the linear approximation, based on the theory of radiative heat transfer. The result shows that the phase-mismatch enhancement of the quality factors of all-solid-state optical resonators can be increased nearly 20-fold by utilizing the PC structure. We also show that one can realize quality factors that are comparable to those of existing fiber-based resonators.Born Again: The Evolution of Romance Being born again takes on a whole new meaning when you live it out in the real world. Dr. Peter R. Grinspoon is an American psychologist, author and lecturer. He received his PhD in clinical psychology from the University of Arizona in 1987 and since then has worked in a variety of mental health settings with diverse populations. In 1997, he co-wrote The Essential Grinspoon & Bakalar Guide to Depression, which was widely used by mental health professionals. He currently directs the Institute of Archeological Sciences at Goldsmiths University of London, where he is also the director of the Practising Archeology course. Dr. Steven Jay Gould was an American paleontologist, science popularizer, and historian of science. His best known work was a paper he presented at the 1980 meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) entitled "Why Evolution is True", in which he argued that Darwinism, the theory of evolution by natural selection, was the best explanation for the vast array of life on Earth. He used the phrase "in the fullness of time" to refer to the discovery of the structure of DNA and of the mechanism of evolution through natural selection. Jonas Salk, D.V.M. (1914 – 1995), was an American virologist, inventor, biologist and physician. He was a pioneer in the area of polio vaccine research and development, and developed the vaccine for children under the age of two. He was later responsible for the mass production of the vaccine for the developing world. Thomas Chalmers (1780 – 1853) was a Scottish physician and phrenologist born in the Parish of Gogar in 1780. He studied medicine at the University of Glasgow and then specialized in phrenology, initially in France, where he studied the works of Franz Joseph Gall. He later became the chief phrenologist in Glasgow. Charles Francis Atkinson (1829 – 1912) was a Scottish-born American architect. He was born in his birthplace, Edinburgh, into a family of architects, and was educated in Scotland before immigrating to the United States. John Parkyns (c. 1495 – 1555) was a Scottish barber-surgeon and member of the Perth Parliament in 1552. He was the first person to write on insanity and the origin of syphilis. Thursday, 14 June 2016 Lunacy continued to be treated with mercury, at a time when other psychiatric treatments were being developed, and remained the standard treatment for mental illness. Indeed, it
