Evaluation of in vivo cisplatin nephrotoxicity by extracellular matrix measurement: a preliminary report. The objective of this study was to evaluate the diagnostic sensitivity of histology and of the functional tests [radionuclide cisplatin ((67)Ga) renogram, calculated glomerular filtration rate (GFR) and platinum (Pt) levels in the renal cortex] for the in vivo assessment of cisplatin-induced nephrotoxicity. The study was performed on six rats treated with cisplatin and six untreated rats. Cisplatin was given daily by subcutaneous injection for a total of nine doses. The rats were then killed 1, 4 and 14 days following the onset of administration. The extent of injury was evaluated using light microscopy, immunohistology for total and type I collagen, and autoradiography for (67)Ga. The functional tests were used to measure GFR and Pt levels. Total collagen content was significantly increased in the cortex of cisplatin-treated rats in comparison to the control group, and decreased back to normal 14 days after treatment had been completed. Type I collagen was more abundant than type III. In the control group
