“HyperMotion Technology is a significant advancement in football video games and one of the key factors in the new FIFA experience.” stated Jordan “Revo03” Reeves, Senior Producer. “Since the start of development, the team has worked tirelessly to uncover the core gameplay mechanics, mechanics that are specific to FIFA, and ensure that the game is balanced and fun for players, while still staying true to our traditional gameplay. We’re excited to bring FIFA to players and I hope everyone enjoys the fresh and exciting new FIFA experience.” The movement captured by the suits allows the players to move naturally, and creates a sense of realism. The technology also allows for new ways to play, such as players being able to overlap opponents or perform low-to-high passes. The platform used to collect the data for development, CoreMotions, provides vision for smarter artificial intelligence with the ability to not only identify players on the pitch but also to understand the play it is involved in. “We’ve been working on video game technology and motion capture for over 15 years, and it’s something that we’ve been looking forward to bringing to the FIFA experience for a very long time. There’s nothing like it in sports video games and we know it’ll make a real difference to the player experience,” said David Abromaitis, Co-Founder of CoreMotions. Additional details on FIFA 22 will be provided in the coming weeks ahead of the worldwide reveal on Friday, September 9 at 9:00 a.m. EDT. Apple is introducing a new era of mobile payments Monday at its Worldwide Developers Conference. To commemorate the occasion, Apple has announced three new credit cards in partnership with Barclays, adding Apple Pay support to the existing Barclays cards issued by Apple users. “We’ve always believed that Apple devices have the best privacy, security, and payment technology — putting them at the forefront of the modern mobile world,” said Apple’s senior vice president of internet software and services, Eddy Cue. “Barclays’ cards and the new Apple Pay capabilities built into them put all those capabilities into the palm of your hand, removing the need to carry your credit card with you.” Cue praised the bank for making an investment in Apple Pay. “Barclays came to us and said, ‘You guys want the best
