Create a containerd context The ecosystem around containerd now has a well-developed model for how containers should be installed and run across multiple operating systems. This section describes how you can create a new containerd context. Basic steps Run the following in your terminal: apt-get install -y wget tar -xzf containerd-linux-amd64.tar.gz mkdir -p /opt/containerd cd /opt/containerd wget -O dockerd.service wget -O dockerd.service.disabled sudo apt-get install -y libuser-perl sudo useradd -m docker sudo systemctl restart docker In some cases, all of the commands above must be run in the context of a user named docker Create a containerd context Containerd requires a context. A context is a directory where the containerd binary is located, and the containerd binary is the binary you run with the containerd command. Create a directory structure like this: cd /opt/containerd mk

The MURRAY and KAY Mentored Investigator Award are established to stimulate mentoring in areas of greatest need. The missions of the MURRAY and KAY Awards are to provide mechanisms for stable, long-term mentoring relationships for junior faculty that promote the development of their career development as independent investigators. The two Awards support two faculty mentees per year and can be applied for competitively. The mentors must have demonstrated scientific accomplishments, together with an established track record of successful mentoring. The MURRAY and KAY Mentored Investigator Awards are designed to promote mentoring relationships with successful, established senior scientists. The process for applying for the awards includes review of application materials and interviews with one or more experienced faculty mentors to evaluate the quality of the mentoring relationship. Each year the mentoring faculty are requested to organize a mentoring seminar in their laboratory as a way to better understand how the research on which they are assisting their mentees is currently being conducted and as a way to solicit feedback. During the past year, the MURRAY and KAY Mentored Investigator Award have demonstrated their effectiveness by promoting two new faculty into leadership positions and by creating a formal, enhanced mentoring relationship. A.Q: Java - Externalizing the properties files at execution time I am developing an application in java and setting properties files at JVM application starting. My application has user authentication as username and password. If I have 20 properties files I have to set each of them at JVM application starting, is there any better option in java which can be used to just fill the properties file and don't go to JVM application starting. Thanks in advance. A: Assuming that you have 20 properties files you want to read at startup. I would use an init.d script to read them at startup. I also suggest that you look into using JVM parameters to pass the username/password to your application when starting. The usual method of passing parameters into Java using -D is described here.
