Sagarika Govinda had revealed that Chirag would be a lovable and heartthrob character. Initially, Akshay was seen playing a different character. Later, he replaced Chirag Chirag. According to director Prashant Ingole, Akshay was the most difficult character of the film. He had to play a role which was very different from his previous role of the protagonist. Prior to this film, he had gained popularity portraying an arrogant and aggressive character. Therefore, the director could not choose any formula and hence, he had to keep changing his character in every scene. He stated that Akshay-Gautami was a good pair in terms of comedy and chemistry. He revealed that the audiences were found to be laughing on the first day of the shoot but after that the audiences were found to be very disturbed by the humour and found it as inappropriate and hard to digest. Chirag Chirag Akshay plays the role of Chirag Chirag, a student of R.K. College. He is the son of a retired army officer Arun. Chirag is feisty, self-centred, hot-tempered and rude. He is the rival of Kajal. He is known for his manipulative behaviour, often willing to do anything for his own benefits. Initially, he was portrayed as an arrogant and hot-headed student. The role of Chirag Chir

The head of Australia's top competition watchdog says the Federal Government's pay package for Telstra should be revised to avoid a repeat of the high-profile case that saw Australia's largest telecommunications firm pay $3.8 million in support fees to the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission. ACCC chairman Rod Sims told a Senate committee on Tuesday the commission could have taken proceedings against Telstra earlier if the telecommunications firm had provided proper disclosure of its support agreement with Optus and National Australia Bank, as it did with Consumer Action. "It was only the Telecommunications Department that challenged the validity of the statement provided by Telstra, which eventually resulted in the $3.8 million payment being made to Consumer Action," he said. "You could see it coming, when the fees were not provided, there was going to be a challenge. "When we finally challenged them we had the evidence to show them that they should have been providing the fees." Mr Sims was responding to a question posed by Labor senator Sam Dastyari. The telco giant had agreed in March 2014 to pay $3.8 million as support fees for a review of its main wholesale rates, which was conducted by Optus and NAB as the third of its three banks. Consumer Action launched a freedom of information application and found Telstra had at that time agreed to pay the fees in full — it was a recurring arrangement. Mr Sims told the Senate committee he was disappointed Telstra did not supply the fees in full because it was unable to show "even circumstantial proof of the Commonwealth's liability to pay the fees". "This was demonstrated clearly by Optus and NAB in their statement that the Telstra payments were made based on a contractual obligation to pay the fees," he said. He said "these support fees should have been disclosed to us during the original inquiry". Government's 'subterfuge' used to avoid law, ACCC says The Government had used "a subterfuge to avoid the law" by claiming Telstra's support agreement with Consumer Action was not subject to the principle of sub judice, the ACCC chairman said. Mr Sims said the principle of sub judice prevents
