As you can see using ffmpeg with video as the sole source you only get frames from when its flying and the sound has stopped. In other words the audio in the terminal will be bad.

I've tried using the x264 format as input to ffmpeg and getting the AVI file to play back but it gives a bunch of errors about audio not decoding and also low level segmentation errors. They didn't seem that important when using 2 successive sources each time. I may just try recoding this file with a different approach using mencoder directly. Any ideas?

A: You can add timestamps to the video using the V4L2 API: An application simply has to call

`v4l2_querycap()` before calling

`v4l2_querycap()`. The first call returns a pointer to a `V4L2_CAPABILITY` struct. The function `v4l2_querycap()` uses this struct to return a name/description of the capabilities of the connected device. I'm not a big fan of this solution, since I'm not sure how well it will work under Windows. But it might be worth a try. If that doesn't work you might have better luck using FFmpeg to save the video with an own timestamp in the filename (e.g. `-add_text 'at %s' -y %s.avi`). A: This works on Linux, OS X and Windows. It's a bit messy to set up but will give you timestamps and a label of your choice. It also extends to multiple devices, but I have tested with a single webcam only. The manual is found here: Unix `#!/usr/bin/env sh` `# group (set of three numbers, e.g. 001, 002, 003) that # FFmpeg will label output video files with (optional) # video string. In the format YY/MM/DD HH:MM:SS. (optional). #`

Once set, the group cannot be changed.
`G="103" # store this timestamp inside the label file, which is # written every time the timestamp resets (optional)`
`START_TIMESTAMP=`date '+%Y/%m/%6d1f23a050`
