With benefits from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), states can establish aquatic sanctuaries on publicly owned waters to protect these valuable natural resources from current and potential impacts of human activity. A freshwater aquifer is a water-bearing permeable rock formation or a part of a permeable rock formation in place under the ground where water is found. Any organism that is found in a water aquifer is classified as a species of concern; therefore, a freshwater aquifer is a valuable resource in that it can support the local and migratory wildlife that it sustains. To protect a freshwater aquifer from potential impacts of human activity, an aquatic sanctuary must be established in an area of least impact as determined by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA). To be eligible for a federal aquatic sanctuary designation, an aquatic sanctuary must be established in a location that has the lowest risk and least impact to a freshwater aquifer. For further information on the public interest determination process as mandated by the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, reference NOAA's Policy on US Federal
