I have a front end script that updates the avatar in that field, and backs it up to a file called avatar.jpg. Since people can upload multiple avatars, I want to display them all on the same page. I want each avatar to be displayed on a seperate row as well. Would the easiest way to do this be to simply add another row for the height and width of the avatars in the database? Thanks in advance A: You can do this with a single row, but it is best to make several rows. It will make displaying the images much simpler, when you have hundreds of users on the same page. If you have to calculate the height and width on the fly, then you'll have to know the stored field size, which can change: $height = 12; $width = 36; $data = mysql_query("SELECT * FROM avatars"); $i = 0; $img = ""; while($row = mysql_fetch_array($data)) { $img.= " "; $i++; } Use the variables $height and $width to calculate the height and width of the images. Q: Is it possible to persist ASP.NET Membership Provider for SQL Express 2008 without getting the security warning? I like how the ASP.NET Membership Provider is built. But I'm using the ASP.NET version 2.0, and there's a problem with it in SQL Express 2008 (I think it's a problem with the SQL Express 2008). The membership provider warns me if I'm about to use a role-based authentication system such as ASP.NET's, but since I'm not using a role-based authentication system, I don't get that warning. My question is, human glomerular mesangial cells. We have used the reverse-transcription polymerase chain reaction (RT-PCR) to demonstrate the presence of both angiotensin II (Ang II) and AT1 receptor mRNA in glomerular mesangial cells (GMC). Treatment of GMC with Ang II inhibited growth in a dose-related fashion ( $0-10^{-6}$  M) and increased c-fos mRNA expression; both actions were blocked by the AT1 receptor antagonist PD-123319. Incubation of GMC with phorbol myristate acetate (PMA) also decreased growth and increased c-fos gene expression. In contrast, epidermal growth factor (EGF) increased proliferation and did not increase c-fos expression. These results are consistent with the previous observation that Ang II inhibits mesangial cell growth and that PMA mimics certain features of Ang II on growth control. the ROOT // TODO add catch-all case for cases where we forgot to handle xbs // TODO add
