While Photoshop remains all-in-one for professionals, who can benefit from the power and functionality of the software, the web-based Photoshop doesn't feature the full-featured Photoshop.

Adobe has focused on the toolset for the web designers and developers who want to push the boundary of what's possible in the browser. A beta is a testing phase where the public can test new features and updates on an unfinished product. Beta versions of Photoshop contain bugs and missing parts. Adobe has fixed most of the bugs reported within the beta site, so users are directed to use finalized versions and not beta versions of Photoshop. You can subscribe to them by viewing the "Update" page of the Photoshop website. Adobe beta testers are also provided with a feedback tracker which includes information on the critical issues and fixes that have been added based on feedback. The basic idea is to open the camera and then the software works in the background while you take the photo. Upon capturing the image you can make either minor edits or major edits to the image. For example you can correct color issues by clicking on a contrast slider or making minor adjustments by carefully positioning the crop window. You can also apply some more unusual effects such as distortions. The software can be used to simulate realistic film grain, emulate super hi-gloss paint, super hi-gloss mirror, and more. In the final section of the Adobe Research labs, researchers have even put together ultimate Photoshop presets that show just how powerful the editing tools can be. For example, after creating a new preset a user can choose one of several options including: Photoshop on a computer as an everyday user (you can toggle the camera image with the computer screen), Photoshop as a professional (the image is taken and then the user is given the option to apply any of the presets), Photoshop as a pro (a user can choose from a picture of a room in a house where a painting was placed in a room at a house (if the image was originally made for print) and another picture of a room with the exact same ideal poses, and then the user can change the proportions of the image. This is a great example of how the web is showing the limits of what is possible in the browser, and it's amazing to see Adobe going from a huge company to a company that's now pioneering complex software in the browser while staying fully accessible to everyone. The tech powering this is data-driven machine learning that discovers and learns what everyone can achieve, no matter their skill and experience level. Adobe is calling this "Superhuman AI." Back in 2014, Adobe acquired Cludinary, a company that the same people had previously worked and developed Machine Intelligence with modern online services Facebook Messenger and Google Maps. Cludinary is a services company that has those automated machine learning and AI powered intelligent image tools. This is what leads to the incredible capabilities of Photoshop Camera.

Adobe recently announced the launch of the "Adobe Creative Cloud 2022" product launch at the Photoshop World tradeshow in New Orleans. Adobe Creative Cloud 2022 is a new subscription based service that will deliver all of the prowess of Creative Cloud 1.0 without the clutter of an entirely new suite.
