For a long time, orthotopic bladder substitution has been considered a last resort for the treatment of severe, non-complicated, orthotopic cystectomy after failure of cystectomy as the initial therapy. The robot-assisted orthotopic bladder substitution is a new reconstructive option using the DaVinci surgical system in combination with a standardized surgical technique. This paper describes in detail the surgical technique and its usefulness in our department. At first step, the urinary tract is mobilized to approach the bladder. An appendix cut open anteriorly facilitates dissection of the bladder. In the second step, the different suture techniques are shown and a clear video demonstrating all these steps is included. The da Vinci surgical system and the surgical technique for orthotopic bladder substitution are reported. The advantage of the da Vinci system is to provide the surgeon with a magnified 3-dimensional intraoperative image of the anatomical structures. In our department, we started doing orthotopic bladder substitution as a primary procedure in patients who desire urinary diversion at the time of cystectomy. We had performed this technique in four patients. The postoperative results are discussed. The patient satisfaction with the new procedure is excellent. The robot assisted orthotopic bladder substitution is a simple, safe and effective alternative for orthotopic bladder substitution. We consider this technique as our standard reconstructive procedure.Q: Logging in MVC with Nlog I've been trying to figure this one out, but no luck. If the answer is already here, please point it out. My goal is to use Nlog to create simple log files that I can look at in an application that I've been building. The end result of the application is a.exe file that will accept an entire user database as input. Then it creates a complete database (including an Oracle DB). The problem is, I can't seem to get Nlog to automatically create an entry in the file. I've got a Bootstrapper class that loads up my configuration and Nlog, but when a controller calls a method that uses N
