TorrentFreak being a torrent tracker has been besieged with DDoS attacks in the past week. We've found out what's going on and what to do if you are a visitor to our site. See the post below.

TorrentFreak.com Has Been Sued For Copyright Infringement By A Movie Studio Sometime this week TorrentFreak, the popular torrent tracker and webcast, will be dealing with a bit of a problem. We've been receiving constant attacks from a certain IP address, targeted from a specific ISP. Normally, a DDoS attack, which attempts to make a website or service inaccessible to everyone, would be conducted by an individual who had a grievance to settle. TorrentFreak's owner, Marc, believes that the attacks have been the result of a lawsuit that's been filed against them by a movie studio or distributor for copyright infringement. "They've been searching for a certain movie for some time and have been using various tactics to track it down, including a DDoS attack," says Marc. Yesterday, TorrentFreak received a number of notifications that a legal complaint had been filed. It also appears that our IP address is one of the IP addresses at the heart of the lawsuit, with individuals from the same IP address are caught in both lawsuits. In the complaint, a representative from a company called Walt Disney GmbH (a German company) claims that TorrentFreak has infringed copyright with a number of alleged illegal streaming and download services. On top of the legal issues, TorrentFreak's owner, Marc, is concerned with the effects of the attacks. "These could also be related to our lawsuit," he says. "This particular IP address has sent many similar emails to me in the past and has also been caught by DMCAer in Ireland, leading to websites being taken down there. I've never seen that IP address prior to this and their DNS is currently pointing to a CGNIX hosting facility, so if this is the same IP address, they might be trying to spread their message worldwide." TorrentFreak's owner, Marc, is also looking into whether a denial-of-service attack would be illegal in Germany. He says that in the past, this has been allowed, but after we reported that a few MPAA sites had been targeted, the laws have changed. "If it's a denial of service, it's not allowed because it blocks traffic and completely interrupts services," says Marc.
